

Little Ethiopia – Genuine African dining

Nov 25th, 2013 | By: Kevin Ducheyne

Spotted
by Locals

Image by Kevin Ducheyne

Ethiopia, a country that is unknown to me. Before I visited this little restaurant, my knowledge of this African country was limited to my rigorous studies of numerous 'South Park' episodes. Cartman and his friends have introduced me to the character 'starvin' Marvin', which came to mind while paying a visit to this authentic location. I'm not here to enlighten you, but I have learned that Ethiopia is a wicked and resourceful nation only by enjoying their traditional cuisine. So the lonely string of this puppet got cut, and my eyes are open.

You'll find that the ingredients you've grown accustomed to can be combined in various ways that make you rediscover their potential. Nearly all dishes are served with Injera, flat sourdough, which you will use instead of cutlery while consuming your meal. YES, I advise you to wash your hands before you start eating because your 10 digits will become your best friends. The thin and spongy pancake made of fermented 'Teff' will be all you'll have to grab a hold of your meat and veggies.

I can't believe I'm saying this as a Belgian, but you need to try their Ethiopian beer and spirits. You won't be disappointed. If you are thwarted, I'll buy you a beer in one of my favorite pubs.

There's no need to be shy or to feel inhibited because every soul within a few square meters will be doing exactly the same. At least you know that you'd better wash your indicators before sitting down.

Little Ethiopia | Relaxing, Restaurants | Zirkstraat 8 | +3233362293 Wed – Mon 18:00 – 22:30
Fall's promotion menu (not available on Saturday) € 16,50